MASTER OF MODERNITY

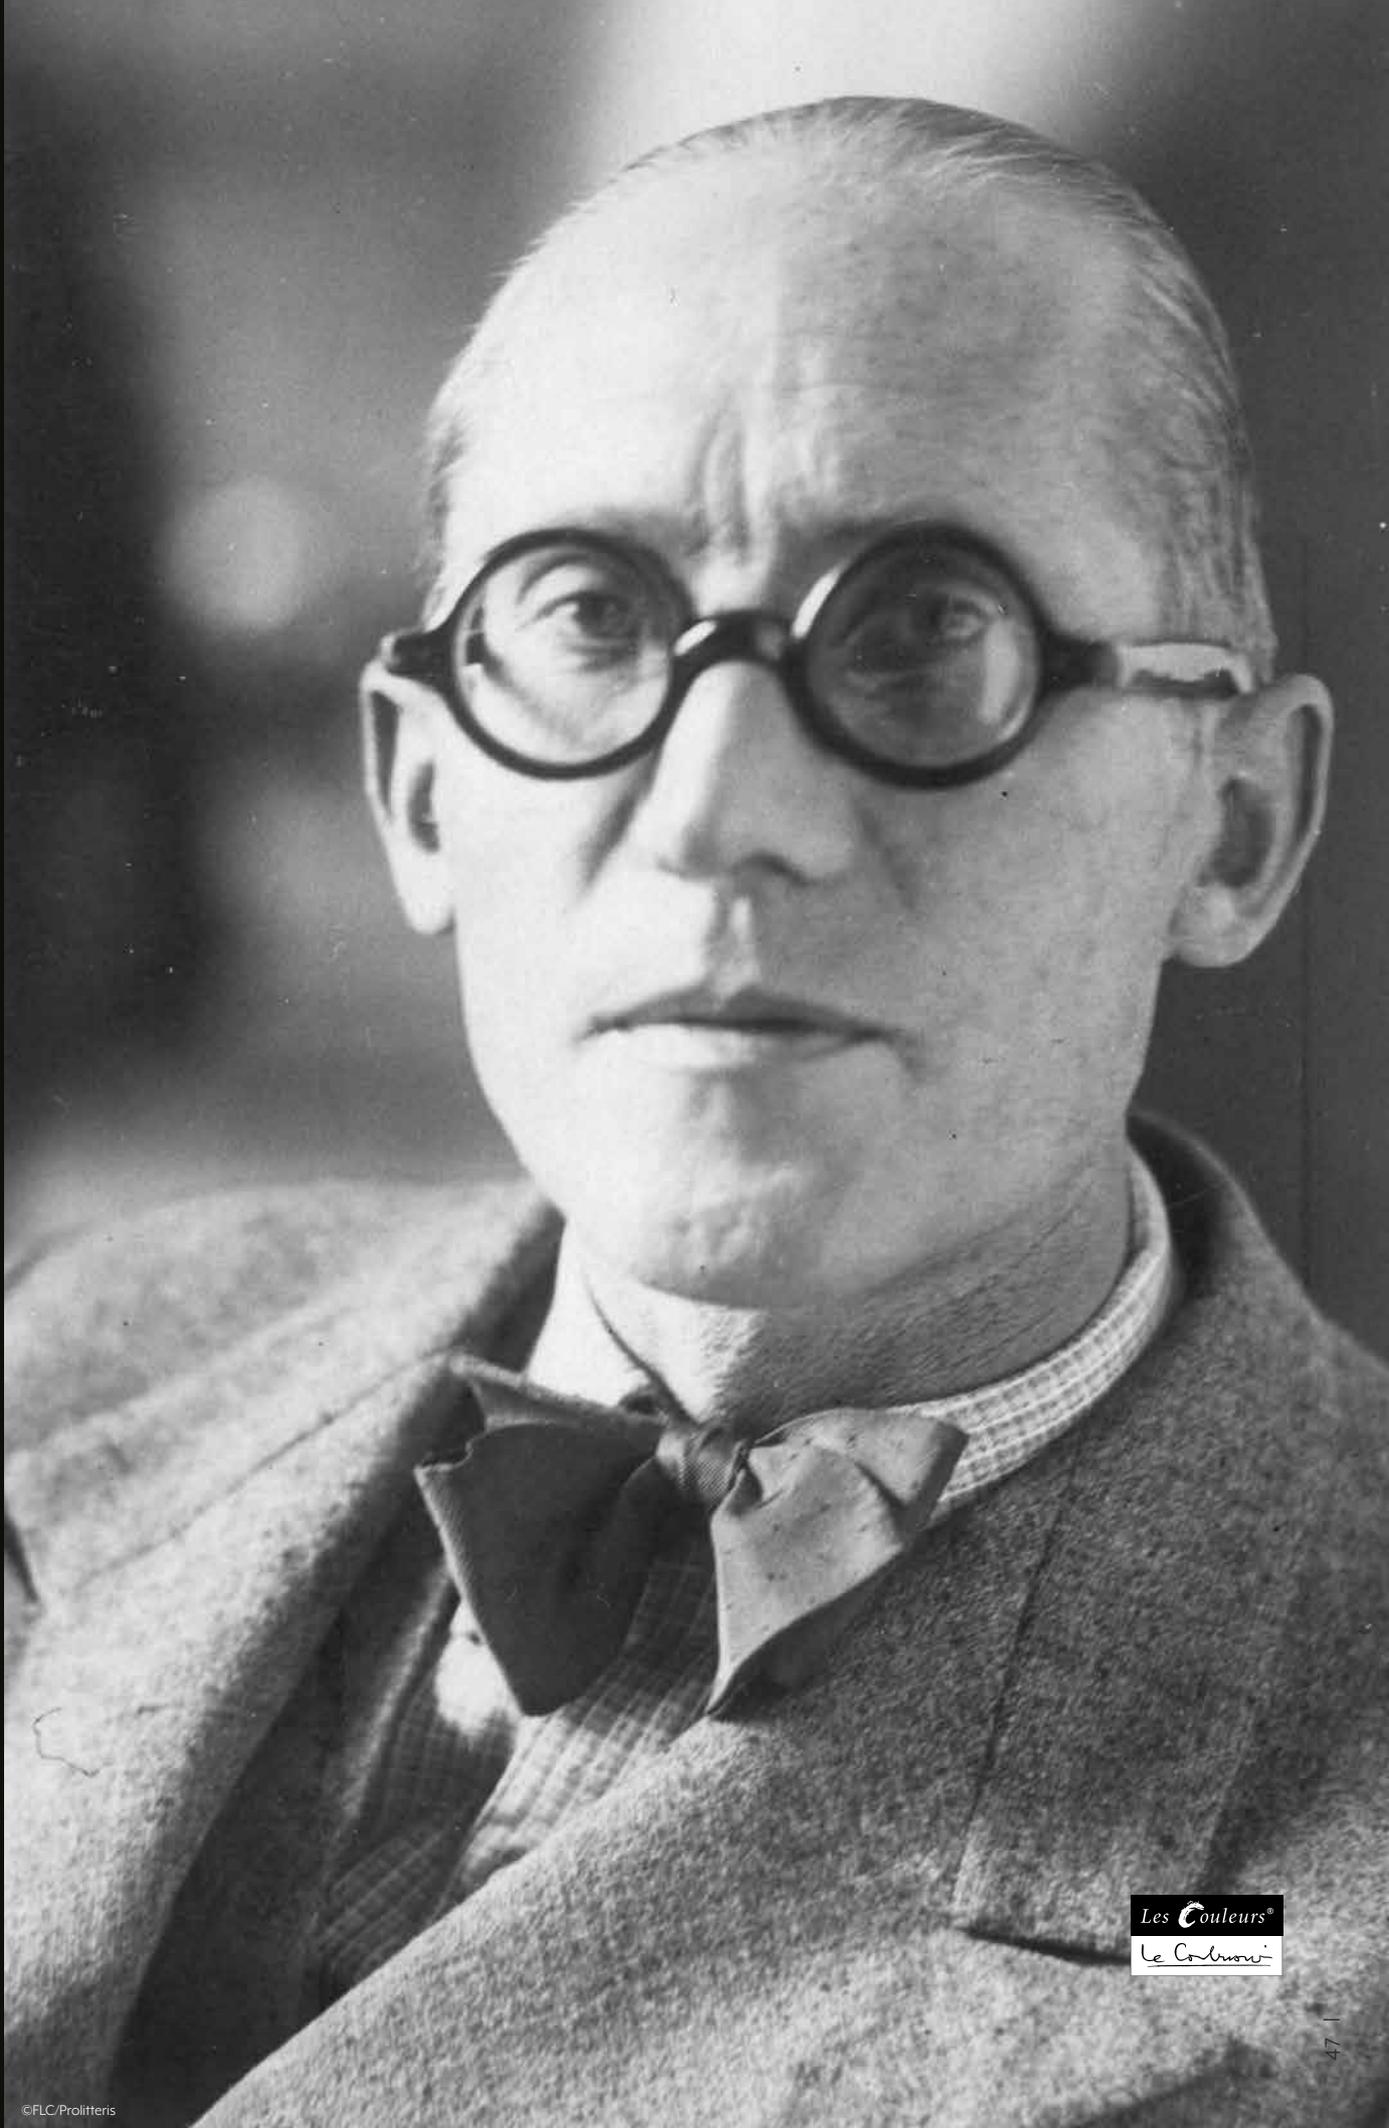

LE CORBUSIER

Charles Édouard Jeanneret-Gris was born in Switzerland in 1887. Following his studies at Ecole d'Art he moved to Paris in 1917 and under his pseudonym Le Corbusier began an impressive career which, as a life's work, can only be compared to that of a Pablo Picasso. As an artist, he created more than 500 works and with his unique style he established purism. His architectural approaches and theories set standards around the world. Impressive works of art, outstanding pieces of iconic furniture, futuristic urban designs and more than 70 buildings around the world, of which 17 in seven different countries are UNESCO World Heritage Sites – Le Corbusier has shaped our image of the modern age, in fact the modern age itself, like nobody else and for all time.

BOSSE AT VILLA SAVOYE

Bosse furniture blends harmoniously and colourfully into the Villa Savoye World Heritage Site, which is a perfect example showcasing Le Corbusier's revolutionary "5 Points of Modern Architecture": Pilotis – pillars made of concrete or steel perform the load-bearing function for the conventional walls and make it possible to freely use virtually all the floor space. Free facade – By extending the ceilings beyond the supporting pillars, the facade is statically freed up and windows can be extended at will. The Villa Savoye was the last building in a series of "purist white villas" designed by Le Corbusier in the 1920s and built in Poissy, on the outskirts of Paris.
